Handbook of Surfactants. The worldwide consumption of surfactants now exceeds several million tonnes per annum. Six of the major types represent approximately 80% of the volume consumed, whereas the remaining 20% is made up of approximately 40 different chemical types.

Handbook of Surfactants | M.R. Porter | Springer

The concept and structure of the book evolved from early attempts to define chemical structure/property relationships of all the different types of surfactants commercially available, into a simple handbook providing essential background information for the surfactant user.

Handbook of Surfactants | SpringerLink

The chapters on the use of surfactant theory and polymeric surfactants have been completely rewritten. Surfactant theory has seen considerable progress in the 1980s, but it is only in the last few years that it has been simplified such that it can be used in helping to formulate compositions containing surfactants in different applications.

A surfactant which strongly adsorbs at the air/interface is necessary in order to produce a foam in aqueous solution. Foams consist of bubbles of gas, with the bubble walls comprising thin liquid films forming three-dimensional structures. There is a junction where the gas bubbles meet (see Figure 4.8).
